Biographical / Historical

Although African Americans have participated in every major U.S. war, the battle for integration and recognition of the accomplishments of Black soldiers was a slow process. It was not until after World War II that the U.S. Armed Forces became integrated, under Executive Order 9981 issued on July 26, 1948 by President Harry S. Truman. Of the more than 2.5 million Blacks who registered for the draft in World War II, about 909,000 served in the Army. In 1944, there were over 700,000 African Americans in the Army; this represented the greatest proportion of men of color to total Army strength in World War II. At its peak, only 8.7 percent of the Army—instead of the planned 10 percent—was Black. In June 1945, Blacks accounted for less than three percent of all men assigned to combat duty in the Army. About 78 percent of all Black males—and only 40 percent of all White males in the Army were placed in the service branches (including quartermaster, engineer, and transportation corps). Among the millions who registered, Benjamin O. Davis, Jr. was determined to integrate the Air Force as one of the Tuskegee Airmen. These individuals enlisted to become America's first Black military airmen at a time when there were many people who thought that African American men lacked intelligence, skill, courage, and patriotism. These soldiers helped alter the ways in which society viewed Blacks. Davis became the first African American to achieve General's rank, retiring as a Lieutenant General in 1970. Approximately 167,000 blacks served in the Navy during the war, comprising about four percent of total Navy strength. Over 17,000 Blacks enlisted in the Marine Corps, comprising 2.5 percent of all Marines. The 761st Tank Battalion was one of the few Black combat units to fight in World War II. During 183 days of combat in 1944 and 1945, the 761st, wearing the Black Panther patch, captured or liberated more than 30 major towns and four airfields. The Battalion suffered a 50 percent casualty rate and lost 71 tanks. It pierced the Siegfried Line into Germany and fought in the Battle of the Bulge. The unit also liberated the Nazi concentration camp Gunslerchen in Austria in 1945.
